History of Ranger

The historic town of Ranger, Texas is located just off IH-20 in the north eastern portion of Eastland County, midway between Fort Worth and Abilene. Although it is believed Ranger's true beginning was when the Texas Rangers were sent to protect the early settlers from Indians, the official 53 blocks and 20 streets that comprised the original town of Ranger were laid out and mapped by the Texas and Pacific Railroad in March 1882 and appropriately named "Ranger".

The 1880's saw Ranger as a convenient railroad location. The area was found to be excellent for cotton farming and stock raising; In addition Ranger became home of a rock quarry, with stones of superior quality and a charcoal kiln, located one mile from town, which became the only industry of its kind in the state. These were the main industries until that famous day in October 1917 when oil gushed from the Discovery Well, McCleskey #1, producing in excess of 2,000 barrels per day. Word of the great discovery spread like wildfire, and the "Ranger Field" was born. It seemed that overnight there were rigs everywhere; the population exploded to 30,000.

Timing of the Ranger Boom could not have been better. Our country, engaged in World War I, was in dire need of fuel. Thus, the oil boom noted as "the Boom that won the First World War," earned Ranger the reputation of "The City of Flowing Gold."

The production of oil decreased; the population of Ranger also declined. Today Ranger is home to approximately 2,700 residents who enjoy its friendly, small town atmosphere. Ranger College, founded in 1926, offers an excellent curriculum to students from around the country.

Industry includes athletic apparel manufacturing, railcar repair, aircraft and commercial printing press components, meat processing and frozen foods, Christmas tree farm, oil and gas production, as well as farming and ranching. In addition to services offered through the library at Ranger College, Ranger has a public library, historical and genealogical preservation and research library, and a museum.

The museum, appropriately named "Roaring Ranger Museum," is located in the former Texas and Pacific passenger depot. It houses many artifacts and pictures through which visitors can relive a great part of Ranger's historic past. Several items are available for sale including small souvenir bottles of "Genuine Crude Oil from the McCleskey Reservoir, various picture postcards, copies of original scenes during the "Boom", a small booklet entitled "The Ranger Story", museum caps, The Eastland County History Book; etc. There is no admission charge to the museum, although donations are accepted.
